BULL MOOSE PREYS ON

SOFT, MUSHY THINGS

WASHINGTON, August 3.—Representative Mondell of Wyoming introduced a bill today to appropriate $200,000 for the United States to pay its share of the cost of exterminating the "predatory wild animals" on the forest reserves of the west.

"Are you after the bull moose?" he was asked.

"No, the bull moose is not a wild or predatory animal. He only preys on soft, mushy things in his native land and we do not have such things in our country," answered Mondell.

He explained that his bill was gunning for timber wolves, coyotes, mountain lions and other wild creatures that kill sheep.

English Doctor Points Out the Danger of Eating Unwashed Greens

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Dr. Feegen, the medical officer of the Croydon rural district, in his annual report, states that he has given much attention to water-cress beds, "as the typhoid bacillus almost invariably gains access to the human body by the digestive tract—among other ways by the eating of water-cress. The water supply to these beds," he says, "has from time to time been bacteriologically examined, with a view to ascertaining the presence or otherwise of abnormal quantities of the bacillus coli. It is possible that some cases of typhoid fever have originated among the workers in the water-cress beds, and it is as well to point out that possible infection may not be actually derived from the water supplying these beds, which may or may not be sewage polluted, but where the beds are in the vicinity of roads and footpaths it is possible that material may be washed therefrom into the beds themselves or into the water supplying the beds. A more important point is the possible contamination of the beds owing to the habits of the workers on them, or of the persons—generally of the hawker class—who hang about the beds when the water-cress is being gathered for them to take away to bunch and sell in the poorer streets of the locality or of London. If one of these gatherers or hawkers is suffering from a mild or ambulatory attack of typhoid fever, it is extremely possible for him to contaminate the water supplying these beds through what may be deposited in the vicinity. It should be clearly understood that it is extremely advisable that any persons buying water-cress should not only have some idea as to where it was grown and through whose hands it may have passed, but should assure themselves before eating it that it has been thoroughly washed in running water."

The Chambers of Commerce of many big cities have combined to fight the control of canal traffic through railroad owned ships passing through the canal. The matter is being carried direct to Congress.
